Today In Irish History | On this day in Irish History

The original Constabulary Force Act barred rank and file policemen from being a member of any trade union. However, gazetted officers were represented by a staff association. This disparity became a sore point following the 1938 labour unrest in Jamaica and the Colonial Officer dispatched a representative to the United Kingdom to study the British Police Federation ...

British State Collusion with Loyalist Death Squads in History - Jamaica Constabulary Force

The IRA's main target throughout the conflict was the mainly Catholic Irish police force, the Royal Irish Constabulary (RIC), which were the British government's eyes and ears in Ireland. Its members and barracks (especially the more isolated ones) were vulnerable, and they were a source of much-needed arms. The RIC numbered 9,700 men stationed in 1,500 barracks ...
